

OPPOSITION TO BALL IN CAPITOL IS EXPRESSED

Legislators Against Charging
Fee for Admission.

An undercurrent of sentiment among members of the legislature against the plan of holding the annual ball in the capitol and charging an admission fee of $5 cropped out yesterday in the lobbies of downtown hotels where the lawmakers are congregating and swapping ideas.

Fee Is Opposed.

Legislators do not object to the ball being held in the capitol. What they oppose is the plan of charging an admission fee of $5. "I am against the principle of the thing," said one legislator, "but I do not think it is right that the people of Oklahoma should be required to pay anything to get into their capitol, and I for one am opposed to the plan," said another prominent member yesterday.

The same view was expressed by more than one member of the senate. Legislators assert that the inauguration ball is distinctly an Oklahoma city proposition, and that it is the duty of the city government to provide for it, and that it is possible it should be held down town.

Brigadier General Harry Pentecost, head of the Chamber of Commerce committee which is arranging for the ball, said last night his committee had searched the matter thoroughly and that there is no other place suitable. The auditorium on Grand avenue where the ball was held four years ago, he declared, was unfit for use for this purpose.

The capitol was selected as a last resort. It is planned to hold the ball on the fourth floor of the capitol which is located in the legislative chamber.

General Pentecost explained that the $5 ticket, too, is for the purpose of defraying expenses, which this year will reach close to $10,000. Funds left on hand from the dance, he said, will be turned over to the United Provi dent association.

1905 WOLF HUNT OF ROOSEVELT'S WAS STRENUOUS

Former President Killed Animal
With Bare Hands.

In April, 1905, at the invitation of several prominent Oklahomans, Colonel Roosevelt, then the president of the United States, came to Oklahoma to engage in a wolf hunt.

On the morning of April 9, 1905, at 5:40 o'clock President Roosevelt and his party arrived at Frederick, Okla., where a great crowd was assembled. Upon stepping from the train President Roosevelt saw Quannah Parker, Comanche chief, whose hand he immediately grasped in a round of friendship. This brought a round of applause from those at the station. After making a talk on the coming statehood of Oklahoma, he left in a carriage for the camp, named Camp Roosevelt, which was about fifteen miles from the town.

On Monday morning, April 10, the hunt began in the big Kiowa-Comanche Indian pasture, which covered about 480,000 acres, and which abounded in deer, wolves and antelopes. In the party was Gov. Tom Ferguson, Col. John Abernathy, the "cowboy prince," the famous Indian chief, Geronimo, and a number of military officials.

Regardless of a heavy rainstorm which greeted the party on the first day, the hunt started with enthusiasm. In all of the chases, President Roosevelt, who was riding a very spirited horse, led the way. At one time in the hunt he saw Colonel Abernathy jump from his horse and kill a wolf with his hands.

President Roosevelt stated that he would do the same thing, and with the first wolf he saw he made good his boast. Besides he killed a troublesome rattlesnake which got in his way. Although always a leader in the chases, one night at the camp when the party was engaged in foot races, he demonstrated that he was no runner.

After the three days hunt, in which eight wolves were killed, the president and his party returned to Frederick. After the banquet his party left for Colorado.

T. R. ON VISITS TO STATE THREE TIMES IN LIFE

Rough Riders' Reunion in 1900 Was First Trip.

Colonel Roosevelt made three visits to Oklahoma during his lifetime. The first was in July, 1900, when he was present in Oklahoma City at a reunion of the Rough Riders. The second was five years later when he attended a wolf hunt in the "Big Pasture" near Frederick, and the third was in 1912 when he spoke in the state during the "Bull Moose" campaign.

The Rough Riders' reunion was held on July 1, 2 and 3 in 1900. The date of July 1 was set for the opening of the reunion because it was the second anniversary of the battle of San Juan Hill, in which Roosevelt and his regiment played such an important part.

The reunion really opened on the night of July 2 when Colonel Roosevelt, late in arriving, reached the Reed & Street building on Main street where the "grand military ball" was being held. All the leading men and women in public life in Oklahoma territory were present. Roosevelt, the grand marshal, accompanied Mrs. Lee VanWinkle.

Paine's fireworks at Kramer's park were produced before the ball. The spectacle depicted the taking of San Juan Hill by the Rough Riders. The conclusion of the spectacle was fireworks reproductions of the face of Roosevelt and Colonel Brodie, another Rough Rider.

The Times file of July 3 said of the fireworks:

"For an hour or more the skies were brilliantly illuminated with the fiery devices. The large portraits of Colonels Brodie and Roosevelt were received with thunderous cheers. The crowd was variously estimated at from 10,000 to 15,000."

Twenty thousand persons met the train bearing Roosevelt into the city. The Santa Fe railroad yards were packed for hours, and the crowd surged along with Roosevelt's carriage on its way to the old Lee hotel.

Shortly after arriving, Roosevelt appeared at a window and made a short talk, in the course of which he referred to Oklahoma statehood and was received with tremendous cheering.

On the afternoon of July 3, Roosevelt addressed a great crowd at the fair grounds. Anton H. Classen, president of the Reunion association, introduced Roosevelt, who spoke mostly about the work of the Rough Riders during the Spanish-American war.

Roosevelt and his staff attended a rough-riding contest held at the park during the same afternoon. The Times records that he rode "the black charger that carried him during the parade."

He also attended the fireworks spectacle at night.

Roosevelt left the city on the same night for Ponca City. From there he went to Anthony, Kan., where he opened his speaking campaign for his first presidential campaign.

THE STRUGGLE

Their New Bridal

EDITH and John had made a round of visits the evening before their departure on their "honeymoon" to bid their friends good-by. They did not expect to see any of them again until their return to Arcadia. Nevertheless, when they stood on the Arcadia station platform waiting for their train Edith wished that at least Mrs. Fern or Ed Black had been thoughtful enough to come down to see them off. Only their children and their mannequin, an excellent French maid, had come to bid the Ferris farewells. The Ferris were busy in the city, they knew. Edith had entered into the mood of a honeymoon to an extent which surprised even herself. That she and John should find themselves bound on a long holiday trip, to go where they wished without a thought of expense, a trip that was to include New Orleans, southern California, Yosemite valley, the Canadian Rockies, and left them free to play as they liked—all this gave Edith a sense of nervousness, as though she were really going on a bridal trip. She was dressed in neat tailor-made blue and looked so young in her happiness that she might easily have been mistaken for a young bride. John, too, with the burden of double work off his mind and with the prospect of a long holiday ahead of him, looked almost radiant. Edith felt shy as she caught an amused loving smile on his lips as he looked at her.

"Well, girl mine, do you think you can forget for a minute that I'm on old story and pretend we're really going off on our honeymoon?" he asked.

"An old story?" she protested. "Why, John, we're going away to get really acquainted with each other. And there's no pretense about the honeymoon. Here are our friends to see us off," she said, kissing the children and mannequin.

Around the bend in the valley their train appeared and drew up as the Ferris gave their children their last squeeze. The station was deserted except for the Ferris party. So Edith allowed herself the weakness of a little pretense.

"Good-by, Mr. Jackie—good-by, Miss Virginia! So thankful to you for coming down to see us off! We'll send you picture postal cards!"

"A happy honeymoon!" the children cried.

"All aboard!" sang out the conductor.

Then the Ferris nearly missed their train. For as they turned to board it small Jackie pulled out a little moccasin from his pocket and threw it at his parents. At the same moment Virginia uncovered a small paper of rice and showered the blushing pair of grown-ups with it.

As though it was a prearranged signal at that moment there burst from the baggage room, where they had been hiding, a crowd of Arcadians, headed by Ned and Ruth, the Ferris, the Blacks and a host of others. A perfect bedlam of cheers and cries of farewell and laughter drew the passengers in the train to the windows.

The sight they caught appealed to them immensely. There is something in the spectacle of a couple starting off on their honeymoon trip that stirs a kindly amused interest in onlookers. None of the passengers thought otherwise than that they were witnessing just such a sight. For the crowd of people on the platform were pelting the couple on the steps of the train with rice, old shoes and flowers.

When the flustered couple finally escaped into the car and the train pulled out amid a chorus of cheers and cries and blasts on the engine whistle, they found themselves the focus of amused inspection by all the passengers. Bravely they tried to appear at their ease and to take the whole affair as though they were only onlookers instead of principals.

Then, to their dismay, the conductor entered the car with a great bridal bouquet in his hand and approached them.

"The ladies and gentlemen of Arcadia Country club asked me to present this bridal bouquet to you, Mr. and Mrs. Ferris, with their best wishes for a merry honeymoon and a long and happy married life," he said. "And I take the liberty of adding my good wishes along with theirs, and I'm sure all the passengers join with us in their sentiments, don't you, ladies and gentlemen?"

A patter of applause from the grinning and laughing passengers completed the Ferris' confusion. John Ferris arose in his seat, and, with a crimson face, addressed the passengers.

"The joke is as much on you as on us," he said. "We've been married for fifteen years, in fact."

"Ha, ha, that's what they all say," a young fellow cried, and in the general laughter which followed John sat down more flustered than ever.

Edith, rosy with confusion and happiness, leaned over to him and whispered:

"Never mind, dear. Let them think what they want. Perhaps they are right, after all!"

House Members Caucus.

House Democrats caucused this morning and perfected the organization according to the state male several days ago by Robertson supporters.

Practically every member of both houses had arrived in the city this morning and everything is in readiness for the drop of the gavel at noon tomorrow which will start the seventh general assembly on its way for what members estimate will be a sixty to eighty day session.

Here's the times organization perfected by the caucus:

Tom Waldrop, Shawnee, speaker.

J. B. Harper, LeFlore, speaker pro tempore.

George Thomas Russell, sergeant at arms.

Rev. R. L. Black, Calvin, chaplain.

Nesbit Caucus Chairman.

Paul Nesbitt, Pittsburg, counts representative and former speaker.

was elected caucus chairman, which carries with it the majority floor leadership, and Bert Hodges, Okmulgee, was made caucus secretary.

Bert Marston, of M. Alesier and J. C. Burd, retiring sheriff of Jackson county, were chosen first and second assistant sergeant at arms respectively.

[W. H. Berry, former Oklahoma city police sergeant and first assistant two years ago, failed to land a berth in the new organization.]

Rev. Black, caucus choice for chaplain, defeated Rev. John Roberts of Oklahoma City. Black was not a candidate, his name being placed before the caucus without his knowledge by Ben Harrison, Hughes county representative.

"I am for him because I want one opportunity of voting for a man who is not seeking a place," said Representative Cheatham, Creek county and the caucus voted almost unanimously for him.

A committee on employees was selected which meets at 2 o'clock this afternoon to pick stenographers, messes and other minor employees.
